Lyons, Pipes & Cook

Progressive Mobile Law Firm

Most law firms work at being progressive, both for their clients and for themselves. Not many can prove their success like the firm of Lyons, Pipes & Cook in Mobile.

One of the oldest firms in this historic city (the firm was established in 1899), LPC's 28 lawyers practice in all areas of the law and they even have a criminal and domestic department. But while this long established firm enjoys a rich tradition, it is known as a visionary firm as well.

As the city experienced an inner-city decline in the 1970s, LPC made the radical decision to build its own office in the heart of downtown—the first new construction in the area in over 30 years. The firm holds fast to the belief that Mobile is a city of promise. "As long as the banks, courthouses and port are located downtown, the firm will be also," said President Cooper C. Thurber.

That decision has proven sound, as the area is currently experiencing explosive growth and revitalization. And true to its historic pattern, LPC remains on the forefront of both the new growth along the coast, and the rebirth of the downtown Mobile area. The firm recently finished renovating a historic building just across Royal Street from its main location in Mobile, and it is also serving clients all along the coast through satellite offices in Pascagoula, Mississippi, and Gulf Shores, Alabama.

In anticipation of the promised thousands of new jobs in the area as a result of numerous new industries and businesses coming into the county, the firm recently formed a strategic alliance with the well-respected Birmingham labor and employment firm of Lehr Middlebrooks & Vreeland. By partnering with the LMV firm, LPC is positioned to serve any number of new industries as well as its existing clients who have labor and employment needs.

The lawyers and support staff at LPC share a vision of what it means to provide excellent service in a thriving Deep South city, even when adversity strikes. The firm's Mobile offices made prominent headlines during Hurricane Katrina when the major networks showed footage of water lapping at the back door during flooding. The following morning, every employee, from runners to the senior partner, gathered to remove sodden carpet and wet sheet rock, despite the fact that every one of them had experienced personal property damage as well. Within 48 hours, the firm was up and running again, serving its clients—and that is clear evidence Lyons, Pipes & Cook intends to be around another 100 years.
